Judging Quality

“We are judged more by our quality of care than our bottom line,” said Kevin Anderson, President/CEO at the kick-off event for Wesley Homes’ new Quality First program. “As a not-for-profit, we are held to a higher standard, especially when we ask donors to give us their philanthropic support.” The higher standard is a vision rooted in high quality, resident-centered care and services at a price that is affordable for middle-income seniors.

The February Seattle Times series “Seniors for Sale” about Adult Family Home licensing and regulation in Washington State raises questions about how to find quality care. Kathy Leitch, a deputy director with DSHS Aging and Disability Services Administration, was quoted saying, “There’s this idea that [adult family homes are] a cottage industry, and that the state shouldn’t be overly regulatory.” This is a striking contrast to the steep regulation and rigorous survey process that skilled nursing centers and assisted living communities are subject to at all times.

Families that choose Wesley Homes for retirement living, long-term nursing care and/or home health care have greater assurance of fully licensed, well-trained nursing staff. Operations are surveyed regularly by DSHS and posted for public access. “We are constantly reviewing our procedures and, most important, patient care,” said Sheila McDonough, Director of Nursing at Wesley Homes Health Center, “not only to prepare for our next survey but to ensure the highest quality of life for all our residents every day.”

Judging Quality (CONTINUED)

While the smaller setting of an adult family home is an appropriate choice for some people, Wesley Homes offers a greater array of services including physical, occupational and speech therapies; fitness programs; a variety of dining options with nutritional counseling; social and mental stimulation activities; a Chaplain and religious services; support groups for caregivers; and trained social workers.

A resident at Wesley Homes Des Moines, Emi Beckwith, was pleased with the therapy her husband received at Wesley Homes Health Center. "The other nursing home didn't have the same therapy program," she said. "When we brought him back to Wesley, the therapist spent more time with him getting him up and walking. His quality of life improved from where he was."

This positive resident experience only happens when quality care is provided.

Lea Hill resident Marjorie Wolfe

Jean Olson, Des Moines staff member

THE KEY GOALS OF QUALITY FIRST ARE TO:

Reaffirm our public commitment to quality;

Assess our strengths and opportunities for improvement;

Pursue continuous quality improvement based on the belief that improvement is always possible; and

Earn the public's trust and the confidence of all stakeholders.

Ensuring Quality Care with Quality First

Adopted by the Board of Trustees at their retreat in September 2009, Quality First is a national quality initiative for the aging services field and a framework for earning the public's trust. This year, Wesley Homes' residents, future residents, family members, home health clients, community members, board members and staff at all levels started work on this comprehensive quality initiative. An on-going program, Quality First guides each team through the review, assessment and documentation of quality practices within a specific area throughout the organization.

Quality First committees are meeting regularly, reviewing checklists, measuring outcomes and reporting findings. They cover the areas of governance, leading-edge care and services, consumer participation, continuous quality improvement, community involvement, human resources, consumer friendly information, research and education, and public trust. All committee members will convene at the end of the year to celebrate their achievements, evaluate the process and make recommendations for the coming year.

"I believe Quality First will be more effective than accreditation because it is an on-going program that involves people from both inside and outside the organization," said Kevin Anderson, President/CEO. "I expect these committee members to hold us to a higher standard of quality care and services than we have seen before."

resident profile Bob Ortmeyer

"Bob may well be our resident with the earliest link to the beginnings of Wesley Homes," wrote Anna Hasagawa in her May 2005 profile of Bob Ortmeyer in The Grapevine, a publication by residents of Wesley Homes Des Moines. It continues, "When he was in his late 20's he was present at the church conference where Dr. Stanley Logan introduced his dream for a Christian retirement home."

One of the four required Methodist ministers on the Board of Trustees in the early days, Bob recalls Dr. Logan's dreams. "Some of them we hardly knew what to do with," he said. "It was Dr. Logan's good friend and the second Wesley Homes Administrator, Willard Stanton, who was the detail man." Stanton helped develop the plan to finance Logan's dream and build The Gardens. The plan identified people with wealth who could fund a room for $7,000 each. They could use the room themselves or let it be used by others without sufficient funds. According to Bob, this was the beginning of the benevolence that continues today as the Circle of Concern program.

In 1959, the Bishop moved Bob to Spokane where he got involved with Rockwood Retirement Community. But, it wasn't long before Bob reconnected with Wesley Homes. His mother moved to Wesley Gardens in the 1970's, where she lived for eight years. At the time, Bob was the District Superintendent in Vancouver.

"I had to come to Seattle for meetings and would stop in to see her," he remembers. "She loved to play Scrabble. Sometimes I'd misspell a word to see if she'd catch it."

In 1981, Bob and his wife, Helen, signed up to live at Wesley Homes. He retired in 1985 and in 1988, they moved into a cottage, where they lived for 12 years. Helen passed away eight years ago and Bob now lives in an apartment in The Gardens, complete with his grand piano!

Listening to Bob's recollection of Dr. Logan's dream, it is clear that the dream lives on 65 years later. Dr. Logan wrote that many homes offer "fairly comfortable rooms, good meals and care." His dream was to "establish a superior type of home" for "abundant living, social, recreational, cultural and religious facilities." Bob agrees that dream carries on at Wesley Homes today with new communities like Wesley Homes Lea Hill and the plan to redevelop The Gardens.

Asked how things have changed from the time when Dr. Logan's dream began, Bob replied, "People have more money and everything costs more." However, he continued, "I've found that human nature is much the same no matter what the generation."

He shared a story about a farmer who said he wanted "enough income to live on and a little to play around with on a Saturday night." People also want, "education for their children, enough for retirement, a decent place to live, and friendship with the people around them." Lastly, Bob concluded, "People want the opportunity to fulfill their abilities and to have hope in their lives."

Going on 93 years of age, Bob said, "People ask me if I had my life to live over again, what I would change." His answer: "not very much."
